

PROJECT PROPOSAL

The website I plan to make will be a pseudo-business site where you can commission a short manga (comic) of yourself in any requested scenario. I think to coincide with this, I'll make the theme of the website hand-made, with most—if not all—of the website in a drawn style.

The homepage will be an overview of the business showcasing the art-style with a couple of example pieces and their differing scenarios, a video of a time-lapse of drawing a piece, some text describing the process making them, and about my style. Regarding the subpages, one can be a “Contact Me” page with a (fake) phone number, address with a picture of the location, and an email address. A second subpage will be the “Commission” page for purchasing options with the length (pages), black and white or color, a spot to submit a reference photo of you with the order, and a block to add text to describe the scenario you want to be in. The third subpage can be either a “Reviews” page, or an “About Me” page, though I'm a bit unsure, as either of these would feel forced for the sake of another page. Perhaps I will make it a separate “Lessons” page where you could purchase personal lessons.

Ideally all the work will be done by me (even though I'm not particularly good at drawing, I just thought this would be a good idea for a website), but I may have to take art other people have made and pass it off as my own, given that this is in an academic setting, and the purpose of this is to showcase the coding proficiency and not my art proficiency.

Other than an example colored piece, I plan for the entire webpage to be in black and white to match the manga theme, so to spice it up the webpage will be accented with characteristics resembling manga panels with screentones and dialogue bubbles.